Global Legal firm Seek Data Strategy Improvements

Adatis enable a global legal firm to implement a new data strategy, resulting in improved data management and governance.

Situation.

This global legal firm had identified the need to develop a data strategy to rationalise and consolidate the management of their data. The work on this had already begun and the legal firm sought assistance from Adatis to develop the strategy to the next level of detail, as well as potential assistance for the future implementation of the strategy.

Reporting was constrained, not only by the volume, quality and consistency of the data but also by the time taken to produce reports. There was lack of governance, ownership and accountability with few roles and responsibilities defined, which ultimately led to limited services that could be offered to clients and internal stakeholders.

Approach.

Adatis worked with the legal firm to translate the current strategy work into the supporting detail and defined target state, supported by an implementation plan. The defined target state consisted of people, process, and technology themes. These themes covered:

- A data management maturity assessment
- A target operating model/services model
- Governance structures
- Governance process
- Data management reference architecture design
- High-level operating processes

Outcome.

Adatis delivered a series of documents detailing actionable plans for improvement around data management strategy, architectural approach and delivery approach.

The intention is that this strategy will accommodate future growth and integrations via mergers and acquisition.

Adatis offer professional services specialising in data analytics, from data management strategy and consultancy through to world class delivery and managed services.
